QUESTION 1

Cascade Profiler is reporting the traffic on Steelhead optimized flows separately than the connections on tcp/7800 between two Steelheads. In other words, from Cascade you see flows for traffic on various ports used natively by the clients and servers across the steelhead as well as flows for tcp/7800. What does this indicate?

- A. This is normal in optimization environments and provides the proper reporting of traffic volume between locations.
- B. This indicates that Flow data is being reported on the optimized connection, between Steelheads and has no impact on reporting.
- C. This indicates that Flow data is being reported on the optimized connection, between Steelheads and can lead to Cascade double-counting volumes between locations.
- D. This cannot happen.
