QUESTION 5

An enterprise-wide web service uses the getOrderDetails API to return only the order status to other systems within the organization. This service is used by the contact center for customer sales orders as well as the merchandizing department for supplier purchase orders. The customer service department has issued a request to also return the ship node from which the customer sales order will be shipped out from in addition to the order status. How can this be most effectively accomplished?

- A. Along with getOrderDetails API, getShipNodeList API needs to be invoked to return the ShipNode attribute for the Sales Order document type.
- B. A composite web service using a custom API that would append the ship node to the result of the existing web service should be defined.
- C. The additional attribute "Ship Node" can be added to the API template of the getOrderDetails API for only the Sales Order document type.
- D. Since the web service is a common service for both Sales Order and Purchase Order, the only way is to create a new web service to return the additional attributes.

Correct Answer: C
